Appellate Defender Training

Overview

NLADA's Appellate Defender Training (ADT) is an intensive multi-day skills development program for appellate public defenders (including contract and assigned counsel defenders) practicing in both the state and federal system appellate courts. ADT uses a "learning by doing" teaching methodology: participants will bring their own case files to work on during the program, and they will be asked to apply the practice methods presented through ADT plenary presentations and materials to their case. With the assistance of expert faculty, participants will analyze fact and law issues, develop case theories and themes, and incorporate them into their brief or writ drafting. ADT is the only national appellate defender conference where participants work on their own cases, not just hypothetical problems.

Curriculum

The 2010 Appellate Defender Training consists of group plenary sessions, in which faculty and participants work together on the program model or case file to demonstrate appellate skills and techniques, and small group workshops, in which the participants work on their individual cases with two experienced faculty members using the skills and techniques learned in the plenary session. The curriculum also includes a one-hour interactive presentation on appellate ethics. This year's program will feature two concurrent tracks: the Skills Writing Track and the Advanced Advocacy Track.

Preparation for the Conference

Prior to attending the program, all participants must prepare a one-page, typed factual summary of the case upon which they will be working during the training and bring 12 copies of the summary to the program. For the Skills Writing track, the case should be a direct appeal of a felony or misdemeanor conviction; however, it must not be a case in which the participant has already written the brief. For the Advanced Advocacy Track, the case should be either an unsuccessful writ that was considered by their state Supreme Court or the Circuit Court of Appeals or a case that is being targeted for a possible writ to the U.S. Supreme Court. Participants should read the trial transcript and record of the case in advance of the training and bring summaries of any expert or other specialized testimony. Copies of factual summaries and other materials cannot be made on site.

Limited Enrollment

Enrollment is limited by faculty size and the number of meeting rooms available, on a first-come, first-serve basis. Total enrollment will be limited to 42 participants for the Skills Writing Track and 14 for the Advanced Advocacy Track. Registration is restricted to attorneys engaged in or about to become engaged in the defense of criminal cases. Public and contract defenders and assigned appellate counsel will receive priority. Applications have exceeded available spaces at past events, so early registration is strongly encouraged.

Track I – Skills Writing Track

Participants in the Skills Writing Track will thoroughly analyze the facts of their cases, develop comprehensive theories of defense with supporting themes, create persuasive story lines to forward their theories and themes, and begin to effectively write their briefs. The Skills Writing Track will consist of 6 sections: 3 for General Skills and 3 specialized small groups – a Federal Defender Group, a Juvenile Defender Group and an Advanced Writing Group. Participants in the Advanced Writing Group, which is intended for intermediate and more experienced appellate defenders, must have at least 5 years of experience handling state and/or federal appeals and have previously attended NLADA's Appellate Defender Program or similar appellate training program.

Track II – Advanced Advocacy Track

The goal of the Advanced Advocacy Track is to provide support and training for state and federal public defenders who wish to produce substantially better written and more polished writs of certiorari to the U.S. Supreme Court. Experienced appellate defenders will learn the “nuts and bolts” of issue analysis, substantive law issues and procedural rulings from the most recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions, developing theory and themes, and drafting techniques for “winning” writs. Attorneys attending the Advanced Advocacy Track will use either an unsuccessful writ that was considered by their state Supreme Court or the Circuit Court of Appeals or a case that is being targeted for a possible writ to the U.S. Supreme Court. The Advanced Advocacy Track consists of 2 sections. Participants will work in a small group setting with experienced attorney facilitators to write and polish the case files they bring to the program and will argue to a “judicial panel” of their peers why their writ should be accepted by the Supreme Court. Participants of the Advanced Advocacy Track should have at least 8 years complex appellate advocacy experience.
